

ABSTRACT

A method of operating a processor including loading one or more bytes of data within a register associated with microengines with a shifted value of an operand and preserving or clearing the bytes of data that are not loaded. The method further includes providing a bit mask that specifies which of the one or more bytes of data within the register are affected.

5